

There are people who are physically and mentally challenged and they face many problems that prevent them from leading a normal life. Write a 200-250 word essay expressing your opinion on the point. What can we do to change their life for the better?

Of course, there are people who are physically and mentally challenged and they face many problems that prevent them from leading a normal life.

They don't want to live and think that their existence is a torment for themselves and for their closest people. Therefore, sometimes, families refuse from such children or the elderly. The sick young man can be lonely all his life. It's not uncommon, when people finish their lives by committing a suicide.

But some sick people find energy in themselves and enjoy usual things, happy when they meet relatives, they just happy that they are alive. These people have a family which will always help and friends who support them. And they live happily, though not for long. After all, even the sick person has the right to happiness.

Today medicine has become better: new medicines are invented, as well as new products, equipment, and new technology for treatment of people and making good operations. There are robots which make the operations for sick people. In my opinion it is a little step forward for the future.

I'm sorry for sick people. But it's better not to get upset and be optimistic. Perhaps, tomorrow a medicine from one's disease will be found. I hope that in the future there will be less sick people.

(218 words)

*Lokhova Ann
10th form
Gymnasium №2*